The journal continues to grow and develop. Under this cover is the first guest-edited, as well as our first bi-lingual, issue. It is the fruit of a recent international conference on the Fatimid Mediterranean and makes available in an English-language venue current scholarship on the archaeology of the medieval Maghreb and al-Andalus. Other guest-edited issues are planned for the next few years, including a French-English volume on the so-called “grenades,” an issue on Islamic Africa, and one on Islamic Portugal.

It is also my pleasure to announce the launch of our Monographs in Islamic Archaeology series, which is co-edited by Asa Eger and myself. More information can be found on our website: <https://www.equinoxpub.com/home/monographs-islamic-archaeology/>. Contributors can contact the co-editors directly with proposals.
